[COMMUNICATED TO THE MOCKING BIRD.

[Dedicated to Miss M. A., of lele of Wight, Va. Thrice welcome, fair bird, - with voice wild and With thy plumage of pearl, and silver-barr'd wing, So cheerily warbling, oh come to my tree, And all the day long thy mimiery sing. Fondly I listen and laugh at thy glee,

As fluttering thou comest, and trilling the lay, Of woodpecker first—then the little pee-wee, Now the robin and quail and pretty blue-jay Excelling them all-yet a mimic so true, I fancy I list to the whole forest choir, And through the lone night, dost thy carol renew

Making melody sweeter than Orphean lyre Lo! dawns the morning and still thou art there To herald with music the advent of day:

I wake to its raptures -- away with all care, To drink in the strains of thy rich varied lay Then, on with thy "Bird-song," sweet "Lind" of the And cheer with its notes thy favorite heath-home

Thou art of all, the brightest minstrel of God,

The charm of the world's vale and light of its Wilt thou go, little pilgrim?—to what other shrine?
When here thy pure matins and vespers are done.
Oh! wouldst thou stay always to gladden this scene.

And cease thy lone flight to the climes of the sur Dost thou sing, dearest bird, in that Eden land, With its bright tinted choirs 'till winter is o'er Should'st thou with their chorus thy symphony

'Twould hush the wild discord of that sunny shore They'd bow their bright forms to crown thee their king, And pay thee the homage of their brilliant throng

Then rising in rapture, they'd poise them on wing To bathe their gay plumes in the flood of thy Alas!, my proud bird, stern winter will drive thee Afar from the bowers thou'st nestled among; But oh, with the flowers revisit who love thee-

Again make our lowly cot radiant with song

Farewell, if I must-but mem'ry will trace thee Away to the groves of tropical bloom-Who watcheth the sparrow-He keep and bless thee. And quick speed the breeze that shall waft thee
